CHALLENGE

Reviewing 1200–1400 documents in one week

Representing the seller in a >$1 billion M&A transaction, the firm had one week to perform sell-side diligence at the client's request. Since they needed to review 1200-1400 documents and populate related disclosure schedules, pure manual review was not an option within the time constraint.

Having piloted eBrevia on a smaller buy-side due diligence project, the team looked to the software as a supplement to make them more effective, efficient and accurate – in record time.

SOLUTION

eBrevia works twice as fast

After a simple 30-minute training with junior associates, the team used eBrevia to complete about 80% of the contract work. The AI-powered software extracted relevant clauses and attorneys performed higher-level analysis as needed. They met the client's deadline, kept the deal moving – and plan to use eBrevia for future sell-side and buy-side diligence efforts.

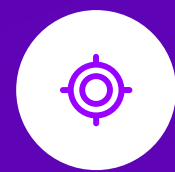

INTUITIVE & COLLABORATIVE

Tagging functionality expedited quality checks while making it easy for junior associates to flag, and receive clarification on points of uncertainty.

EFFICIENT

The tool's built-in export functionality generated the same data points in Excel that were copied into disclosure schedules, so schedules were complete at the same time as document review.

TRANSPARENT

Thanks to the tool's robust dashboard, the project's manager could easily monitor individual contributions, track overall progress and keep the client updated.

eBrevia is really enhancing our abilities and allowing us to focus on the critical thinking part of it, instead of the data management part of it. I could see it being used in almost any kind of practice where you have heavy document review.
